

Cross ownership of our sources of information goes counter to the vital interests of a democracy and should not be allowed. The recent tendency of the FCC to endorse (and even advocate) such cross ownership is NOT IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST. The fact that the major sources of information the American public has available are controlled by 2 of the major defense contractors hardly makes access to a wide perspective of information possible, does it? Please DO NOT WEAKEN the already lax rules in this area any further.

--Jon Davidson. Incline Village, Nevada
(Graduate: Annenberg School, University of Pa)